nuArch claims that it provided certain business technology consulting services to the Company on a monthly retainer fee basis between August of 2008 and April of 2009 in the amount of $123,472.66, and that the Company breached its oral contract with nuArch by non-payment for such services.

Shareholder Update

As described in our 10-K Annual Report for the year ended December 31, 2008, Digitiliti was evaluating strategic alternatives within the portfolio of its business. One of those alternatives was to divest of the Pharaoh Vault business. We made a concerted effort toward that end; however, we could not reach agreement on key terms of the Asset Purchase Agreement, and we were unsuccessful in that effort.

We weighed a number of alternatives, which were to seek other buyers, to move forward with both the Pharaoh business and new product development of Pyramid (code name), or to evaluate other alternatives such as a partnership where we might spin out the Pharaoh business in partnership with another provider. While all those alternatives are still viable and potential, recent events and accomplishments have enabled us to set a strategic direction, moving forward with both our Pharaoh Vault business and our new Pyramid product development.

While we must continue to raise additional short term capital to achieve this strategy, we are confident, with the progress we have made on our new product development, that we can achieve our financing goals.

We expect to launch our new product in 3Q09. It is an innovative and game-changing approach to managing and controlling unstructured and semi-structured data and promises to significantly improve an organization's ability to finally get a handle on data growth, data proliferation and provide CEO's and CFO's with the ability to comply with information policy rules. In addition, our new product will give organizations the powerful capability to easily tap into all the information it creates, stores and archives to gain insight and intelligence for competitive advantage.

Part of our new product solution includes information archiving so there is a high degree of synergism to be gained between our current business and our new product as we go forward strategically.

We have also concluded an agreement to mutually settle claims between 5X Partners and Digitiliti. While the settlement terms are to be kept confidential between the parties, we can state that the settlement did not require us to make any cash outlays.
