Peace Arch Announces Completion of Principal Photography on Original Documentary "Prisoners of Age"

TORONTO, ONT. - Peace Arch Entertainment Group Inc. (AMEX and TSX: "PAE"), a leading diversified Canadian entertainment company, today announced that it has completed principal photography of the documentary "Prisoners of Age," which follows New York photographer Ron Levine's groundbreaking project with geriatric prisoners. Journeying to penitentiaries in Canada and America, the film provides an immersion into the world of senior citizen inmates, revealing a number of important social issues surrounding the aging prison population, and bringing personal dimensions to a growing human tragedy. The one-hour program has been pre-licensed to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (CBC) and Bravo! Canada (a CHUM Television station). The Company retains all other worldwide exploitation rights to the film. "Prisoners of Age" is expected to be delivered in September 2004 and scheduled for broadcast during the 2004/05 television season.

"Prisoners of Age" asks a fundamental question that has no easy answer: What becomes of an inmate who is too old or too ill to stay in the general prison population? Award-winning filmmaker Stan Feingold establishes empathy for the inmates' plight, but segues to a more disturbing question: What about the justice demanded by victims, their families and society at large? The film illustrates the often irreconcilable conflict between retribution and rehabilitation through a comparison of the Canadian and American realities.

"We are enjoying a renaissance in documentary production with the recent financial and critical success of documentaries," stated Blair Reekie, President of the Company's factual subsidiary. "Audiences are hungry for intelligent programs that deal with important and provocative issues, and "Prisoners of Age" is just such a film. A follow-up to "Heroiners," our award-winning 2001 film, "Prisoners" explores a troubling social issue in a sensitive, innovative and visually stunning manner."
