» Temporary Changes to How We Communicate About Our Merger

US Airways' shareholders now have the opportunity to review the Form S-4, the registration statement that provides an explanation of the reasons the American and US Airways boards of directors approved the proposed merger, before considering if they want to vote to approve the merger at their annual meeting on July 12. During this review period, the SEC has strict regulations about what can be communicated, and American and US Airways are prohibited from communicating anything that could directly or indirectly affect a stockholder's vote. So while we can continue sharing factual information unrelated to the merger and objective information about the integration process, along with merger details published in the S-4, we won't be talking as much about the benefits of the merger until the voting process is complete. As soon as the shareholders are able to vote on the merger, we'll resume frequent communications about the great things in store for the new American, and the progress the teams have been making in the Integration Management Office. To learn more about the new guidelines, read a blog on new Jetnet from Missy Cousino, Managing Director, Internal & Labor Communications, and check out our updated Merger O&As.

» The Importance of Employee Wellness

During National Safety Month, the topic of employee wellness is always pertinent. No matter the safety precautions we take, the first step is to take care of yourself. Ensuring that we are healthy and well is the beginning of our path to safety at home and work. US Airways CEO Parker names new American Airlines executive team

US Airways chairman and CEO Doug Parker, slated to be the CEO of the new American Airlines following the US Airways-American merger, has named the executive team of the merged airline. US Airways president Scott Kirby and CFO Derek Kerr will assume the same positions with the new American. American is planning to emerge from Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection and merge with US Airways in the third quarter. American chief restructuring officer Beverly Goulet will be the combined airline's chief integration officer. American senior VP-government affairs Will Ris will continue in his position following the merger. Other senior executives will include Elise Eberwein, US Airways executive VP-people, communications and public affairs, who will have the same role with the new American; Robert Isom, US Airways chief operating officer, who will hold the same position with the merged airline; Steve Johnson, US Airways executive VP-corporate and government affairs, who will be the new American's executive VP-corporate affairs; and Maya Leibman, American's technology and chief information officer, who will be CIO of the combined carrier. Parker also announced that American Eagle president and CEO Dan Garton will leave his position later this year. A successor has not yet been named. American CFO Bella Goren will also depart. "I could not be happier about this team," Parker said in a message to employees from American and US Airways. "They are an intelligent, results-oriented and energetic group who enjoy working collaboratively. They are experienced airline executives who understand and love our business. It is time to move forward and this announcement is a key step on the path. The merger is progressing well and we continue to expect it will close in the third quarter of this year."

EU Expected to Clear Delta, Virgin Deal

Delta is expected to secure unconditional European regulatory approval to buy a 49 percent stake in Virgin Atlantic, allowing it to better compete with rivals in the transatlantic market. The European Commission, which is examining the deal as the pan-European regulator, does not see competition problems, three people with knowledge of the matter said on Monday. Delta and Virgin Atlantic announced the deal in December last year, outlining a joint venture that would allow both carriers to offer more flights at London Heathrow. The agreement is intended to boost Delta's ability to compete with United and with American. The EU competition authority is scheduled to issue a decision by June 20. U.S. regulators are also examining the deal.

Global Entry Expands with Three More Offices

Global Entry, the federal program for speeding international travelers through customs and passport checks at the airport, celebrated its fifth anniversary with the opening of three enrollment offices. With new offices in downtown Washington and at airports in Tampa and Albuquerque, the voluntary program has nearly 40 offices around the country. Under the voluntary program, travelers complete their applications with a brief interview, picture and fingerprinting. The advantage is that participants can skip sometimes long lines for customs and passport control by scanning their own passports and fingerprints at a kiosk, and filling out the customs declaration electronically. The traveler then presents a printed receipt to security officers in a process that officials say takes just a few minutes. Another advantage is that participants automatically qualify for the Transportation Security Administration's Pre-check program, which expedites travelers with specific airlines through security checkpoints.
