A series of Q&As concerning the proposed merger

May 24, 2005

PLEASE PRINT AND POST FOR EMPLOYEES WITHOUT ACCESS TO E-MAIL

Corporate communications and human resources continue to work together to gather employees' questions concerning the planned merger between PSEG and Exelon. We will attempt to respond in a timely fashion. We recognize that information helps ease uncertainties about change. However, please realize that some questions may not have answers until later in the transition period.

Meanwhile, if you have a question, you can submit it by e-mail to mergerquestions@pseg.com.

Q. I have heard that the merged company will be keeping the sunburst (i.e., orange sun) symbol that PSE&G currently uses, but will be changing it to green?

A. Changing the sunburst to green and using it at all of the Exelon companies is one of several ideas that may be considered. Leaving the logo as is in New Jersey, where it has some brand awareness is another option. At this time, no decision about the logo has been made.

Q. The BPU decided that NJ Clean Energy Incentive Programs, including NJ Smart Start Buildings, are competitive services -- and, therefore, regulated utilities will no longer be permitted to provide program management/administration for these programs. Will the merger change that position in any way?

A. The BPU is unlikely to change its position on program management/administration of the NJ Clean Energy Programs as a result of the merger.

Q. What will the growth strategy (2006 and beyond) be for Exelon E&G after the merger is completed, assets are sold off, and employees are reduced?

A. As the finest electricity and gas company in the U.S., Exelon Electric & Gas will have a strong balance sheet and cash flow. This will give the company the ability to invest in the operations of the business, make acquisitions, buy back stock, or examine other options. Exelon's leaders have indicated that they expect that our merger integration will take some time to complete, and that they want to make sure the company is functioning well before any other major acquisitions are undertaken.

Q. I am an engineering technician in electric delivery. Looking at PECO and ComEd, their engineering departments are quite different than PSE&G's structure and job responsibility. Have there been any preliminary thoughts as to how the engineering department in electric delivery will be structured and/or changed to "fit the mold" of the other two Exelon companies?

(Editors note: There were several other questions on what decisions had been made about specific areas of the companies. The following answer applies to all of those questions. We will not be responding to specific rumors in the Merger Q&A about local areas unless decisions already have been made and communicated.)

A. At this point, the integration teams are completing the analysis stage of the integration effort. As part of this work, the teams have been evaluating how the two companies do things, how we do things differently, and what are the benefits and disadvantages to the way things currently are done. They also are looking at best practices outside of both companies, as one of the guiding principles of the integration effort is to seek best practices. In general, the integration team is not yet at the organizational design stage - when decisions like this will be made. In the design phase, the teams will look at the options for creating the new company. There are bound to be rumors about what is being considered or discussed. We will communicate with employees when final organizations or key interim decisions are made.

Q. In a recent corporate communication announcement, the following statement was made: As it does today in both Exelon and PSEG, the shared services organization would continue to provide HR, legal, IT, corporate finance, communications and other support. Can you please clarify which shared services organization this refers to? Does Exelon also have a company similar to PSEG Services and is this the entity that is being referred to for providing support?

A. Exelon has a shared services organization similar to, though not exactly the same as, PSEG Services Corporation. The shared services organization referred to above is the new shared services organization of Exelon Electric & Gas.

Q. During the past couple of weeks, it has been noticed that a lot of people on the board not only those who work for PS, but those who sit on the board have been dumping large shares of stock. If the executives are selling their stock, should I as an individual investor be selling now, as well? Do executives know something that the general investor does not?

A. Whether an investor should buy or sell our stock is dependent on the individual situation that an individual investor faces. Each investor must make that decision based on his or her own situation as do our executives. PSEG discloses all material information in its regular filings with the SEC. Executives who have knowledge of material information that has not been filed or widely released are restricted in their selling of PSEG stock.

Q. Is it true that the decision to use Peoplesoft instead of SAP in the new company is being reopened?

A. As the work of the integration teams has continued, several factors that were not fully considered in the initial analysis of the two computer systems have come to light. Aware of the importance of this decision, the IT integration group is taking another look to make sure its initial decision makes sense in light of new information and will engage a third party to assist in the review. It remains the goal of the integration process to make decisions that will be in the best interest of the new combined company.
